Wasting your money:

- Flights are expensive
- Other costs like passports and getting to the airport
- Exchange rates
- People do it to show off online

Damaging for the environment:

- Flights cause a significant amount of pollution
- Experts have recommended that people take fewer flights each year

People don't appreciate what's in their own country:

- Ignorance about places of interest and natural beauty
- Support local economy
- Lots to choose from

Dear Editor,

A number of politicians and climate activists have recently campaigned for a severe reduction in overseas travel, particularly air travel because of the pollution it causes. In recent times, it has become fashionable to go abroad for summer holidays or breaks with friends but this trend is excessive, wasteful and damaging for the environment. Something has to change.

Clearly this frequent flying is an indulgent and considerable waste of valuable resources. Not only are flights expensive, but there are many other costs involved in travelling abroad: passports, visas and exorbitant exchange rates all have an impact on a traveller's wallet. Ironically, people seem to delight in these financial punishments. Travelling overseas has become an act of showing off, a version of online smuggerly where all people care about is taking a well-positioned selfie to show where they have visited. What an instasham!
